

LITERARY NOTES.

Mr. Edward Everett Hale's forthcoming book "Seven Spanish Critics" is said to be the result of his long enthusiasm for Spain—an enthusiasm first aroused in extreme youth by a particular sort of amusement sent to him from that distant land by travelling relatives.

A volume of Hawthorne's "Sketches and Studies" is just coming from the press of Houghton, Mifflin & Co. It contains papers not before given in the "Little Classic" edition.

"Vanity Fair," is the first volume of the new edition of Thackeray which is to be brought out in London. The whole edition will be richly illustrated. "Vanity Fair" alone contains a portrait of the author, twenty-five steel engravings, and eighty-four wood-cuts.

It is reported by The Bookseller that the new portrait of Hawthorne is the result of an arduous straggle on the part of John Lotthrop Motley. Hawthorne, who could not endure to have his picture taken, was beguiled by Motley into the studio of a London photographer "to examine some portraits. The novelist dropped into a chair, and Motley, going to the other side of the room, called his attention to some object. He looked up, with that glance of quick intelligence which his friends remember so well, and at that moment the photographer, privy to the little conspiracy, exposed the plate. This portrait of Hawthorne is said to be the best in existence.

Mr. Worthington has in press a book for children, which is to be called "Worthington's Annual," and is to contain a host of captivating pictures accompanied by a number of interesting stories and statements true and fictitious.

Miss Dudu Fletcher, the author of "Mirage" and "Kismet," has written a new novel which will be published by the Macmillans.

Mr. Tupper has been publicly complaining of the ways of his publishers, and declares, indeed, that "authors as a class" are helpless in their hands.

Professor Hardy's novel, "But a Woman," is said to have reached a seventeenth edition, each edition comprising a thousand volumes.

The Rev. Norman Macleod, as well as Longellow and others—employed the simile of the meeting ships. "Like two ships which meet at midnight, on a moonlit sea," he wrote in one of his "Parish Papers." "These two persons spoke, then each passed into the darkness and onward to their several ports, but never met again."

The elaborate catalogue of the Art Department of the Manufacturers and Mechanics' Institute in Boston has risen in price from $3 to $4. The edition cannot be reproduced, and it is, it is said, "so rapidly diminishing that the copies remaining are of increased value, and will therefore, as the number lessens, be still further raised in price from time to time as the committee may determine."

The encampment of the 7th Regiment at Peck's Hill last summer was made the occasion of innumerable pranks, and much innocent fun on the part of the gallant militiamen. The acting chaplain of the regiment, Mr. Pellegrin, may not have taken part in these pranks, but he could not have been far away, for in a little book he has related them posthally with considerable sympathetic insight and humor.

To tell old jokes in an interesting way is difficult; and possibly those here related may not have more than a passing interest for the ordinary reader. But to the members of the 7th Regiment and the great army of their friends this chronicle of fun in camp will be readable. The volume is well printed and handsomely bound.

A short story by the author of "Gwendolyn" is coming out in the next Century.
